That and the Sonnets to Orpheus, those were two strings of the same voice. I believe it is entirely possible to use a language, even to a high level, without studying grammar as I myself am doing in spanish, though this is due more to laziness, and a preference for the practical rather than the theoretical I do believe, however, that a sound grammatical knowledge of the language being learnt, provides the learner with a greater depth of comprehension and production as is the case in ones first languageand also with the ability to form and understand, more varied and original if only to them constructions.
